The Foundational Skill and Mindset for All Development

For decades organizations attempted to develop leaders by providing them with feedback. Missing was any preparation of the recipients to welcome and absorb that feedback in ways that promoted fresh behavior. Indeed, career derailment can be predicted by one question: “Does this leader seek and respond to feedback?”

Regardless of the coach’s skill, effectiveness will decline if leaders are not ready to receive or implement feedback.

Great Leaders COACH and Are COACHABLE

Leaders are trained to effectively give feedback, not receive it. Our research confirms that while leaders are generally coachable early in their careers, receptiveness steadily declines with time and promotions to higher levels.

Coachability is a crucial skillset for all leaders. If organizations desire their training and development efforts to impact behavior change, bet on coachability.

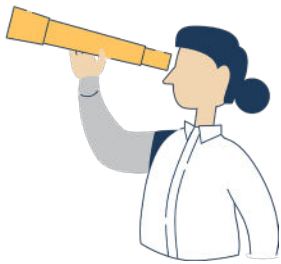

Coachability Program

Leaders learn:

- Why being coachable is a critical first step in any development process.
- Their current approach on five coachability dimensions and how often they signal coachability to others.
- The dangerous leadership assumptions that keep leaders out of their learning zone.
- New habits for capturing coachable moments.
- How to connect a commitment to personal growth with a focused action plan.

COACHABILITY ROADMAP

A coachable leader values self improvement and operates consistently in a learning zone by applying the practices of:

Seek

Respond

Reflect

Act

COACHABILITY allows leaders to avoid wasted time and investment by managing their resistance, elevating their responsibility, and establishing new habits for capturing the coachable moments that matter.
